The 37 Best Websites To Learn Something New* Imagine if schools were just a little bit cheaper. That way you could allow yourself to learn something new anytime at any place. What a wonderful world that would be, because you would have the power to educate yourself in any subject you want. It just so happens that there are a number of websites around the internet where you can learn something new for free. The best part about learning online is that you can do it at any time and from anywhere; be it your work at your job, or your home when eating dinner. The following is a list of the 37 best websites to learn something new, in no particular order.

1. The Khan Academy I took my first step into the sea of infinite knowledge when I discovered the Khan Academy. The mission of this organization is to provide free education for anyone anywhere, and they do this by providing over 2500 bite-sized videos that cover just about every subject you can think of, all available at your fingertips right on their website.
2. Lynda The goal behind Lynda was to create a website that helps you learn specific skills through easy-to-follow video tutorials. They do this by partnering with experts in various fields, many of whom are top writers for major publications. You'll learn software like Photoshop, Illustrator, Dreamweaver, Flash and more for things like web design, game creation and more.
3. The Learning Annex The Learning Annex features all kinds of workshops ranging from ones about photography to opening your own business to learning how to make sushi or even something as extreme as becoming a certified scuba diver. If there is something you want to learn about the world out there is no doubt that they offer some type of class that will teach it to you.
4. Open Culture Here you can learn a number of diverse subjects from arts and literature to computer programming and much more. The only thing you have to worry about is figuring out what you want to learn, because it is that much there for your choosing.
5. Pop Sugar This website delivers a well rounded approach to learning by offering free online courses, free tutorials, tips and tricks as well as humor and entertainment which implies that there is no reason why anyone who visits their site can not leave feeling smarter than when they entered.
